Chapter 1 by Abby

You find yourself locked in the dungeon of a castle, shackled up to the wall, haven't ate anything in weeks. A light flickers in the far end of the dungeon hallways. What do you do, do you call for help thinking its a rescue or cower in fear thinking that this could be it.

Chapter 2 by Criz

If you're smart, you take the coward's way out and find a place to hide, awaiting rescue from above. But you're an explorer - this is what you live for - you're drawn in to these reckless expeditions like a fighter to the ring. There's no other place you rather be than here, hundreds of feet below the hustling city above, searching for the last known whereabouts of the amulet that transcends the age of humanity.

You rip off another piece of cloth from your already tattered shirt, soaking it in your depleting can of kerosene to craft yet another torch. The air down here is nearly to heavy to breathe - torches can last but an hour before coming to their own extinguish. You continue down the cramped hallway of ancient stone to find out what this mysterious light source could be. The cobble ground is speckled in blood - dark, crimson in colour, it appears to be human - revealing itself to a winding path down further into these ruins.

pressing on with excitement and wonder. Astonished but relieved you're greeted with the presence of another man, old and worn from his travels, another explorer. You find out he's been down here longer than what you wanted to learn - forever traveling in circles - and unfortunately there is worse news yet.

"We are not alone, young one. There are creatures among us, beyond what human knowledge has led us to learn; ancient beyond our oldest of writings."
